

Omid Nouripour
What to do about Jihadistan
A Policy Approach to the War on Terror
260 Pages
ISBN 978-3-423-43159-0

Frustrated by what he sees as patchwork politics, Omid Nouripour presents a tangible political approach for dealing with Islamist terror in terms of both internal and foreign policy. He holds that ISIS can be defeated by adopting a judicious combination of ideological, military, political and monetary resources.

The war against ISIS must be prioritised (as is currently the case only in Iraq). Capping its revenue streams is of pivotal importance (q.v. the Panama Papers). Iraq is the key to success, not Syria. But even more dangerous than the Middle East are those African countries with weak state structures, or Pakistan with its nuclear bomb. The architecture of security requires fundamental change. We've spent fifteen years fighting the War on Terror to no avail, and it's about time we considered other strategies.

- the first book by an active politician offering a comprehensive concept for domestic and foreign policy
- based on the author's formidable wealth of experience and his unique knowledge of local conditions

Omid Nouripour

Omid Nouripour was born in 1975 in Tehran. He has been a member of the German parliament since 2006, and is foreign affairs spokesman for the Green Party, as well as holding various other offices. An old hand at politics and a renowned expert on the Middle East, he is the only member of the Bundestag who can speak Arabic and Persian.

More titles from Omid Nouripour

- What to do about Jihadists, dtv Sachbuch, Premium, ISBN 978-3-423-26155-5